Grand Caverns One of State's Top Attracti

GRAND CAVERNS
FORMATIONS
DEFY EXPLANATIONS

Can a green plant grow in a cave without sunlight? Contrary to most popular and scientific belief that sunlight is necessary for green growth, from a stalactite in fabulous Grand Caverns at Grottoes, Virginia, hangs a cluster of bright green fern-like plants to baffle one of the 1,600 electric lights which strategically show off this ancient cave to thousands of visitors each year. The Virginia Travel Council explains however, that the unusual is actually commonplace at Grand Caverns, for it is here that are found some of the strangest phenomena of any cave in America.

Though the caverns were discovered nearly 150 years ago by a man named Weyer, for whom it was originally named, to date no one has found suitable explanation for the large shield-like formations which protrude from the ceiling of Grand Caverns defying the laws of gravity by extending in every conceivable angle in contrast to ordinary stalactites which hang perpendicularly.

Walking through some three-quarters of a mile of well-cleared and well-lighted passages in this incredible subterranean labyrinth, most visitors, among whom have been many professional writers, readily admit that the words prove inadequate to describe what is seen. Judging by the most frequent exclamations, a spontaneous low whistle or sign of delight comes nearest to constituting a suitable vocabulary for such a task. In one room, called the Grand Ball Room, it is easy to imagine strains of a lilting waltz and swirling dancers. In another the natural formation and color create an unrealistic fairyland, while further along in the awe inspiring Cathedral Hall an almost reverant hush descends upon entering. A realistic touch is demonstrated by the guide in this hall as he thumbs a pipe-like formation not unlike the pipes of an organ from which emit musical notes. In still another room as the guide strikes a translucent drapery - like formation that connect floor and ceiling a vibrant, rolling echo like the sound of a colossal drum thunders forth. Along the way are crystal clear pools of pure, motionless water where the visitor gets an unusual mirrored view of the roof of the cavern which suggests a sailing ship or the skyline of New York's Manhattan Island complete with the Empire State Building. To the eye of the imaginative, there is an endless wealth shapes throughout the caverns, many of which are easily identified as suggesting the shape of a horse, a giant lily, a person and even a quite realistic fried egg. Only in a few instances are the caverns illuminated by colored lights so the tourist for the most part sees the natural tones and hues of the interior highly colored by minerals which are present.

Attesting to the rugged safety of Grand Caverns, experts have pronounced the two-hundred foot thick solid rock ceiling, none of which is flat but made up of interlocking layers of stone, as being atomic bomb proof. During the recent war, the caverns were considered as suitable location for government archives in the event that this country should be attacked. The passageways have been made completely traversable without special clothing.

The Nation's Worst Swine Killer

QUESTION: What disease kills the most swine in America?

ANSWER: Hog cholera is by far the worst killer. It destroys about $20,000,00 worth of hogs a year.

QUESTION: What causes it?

ANSWER: A virus—too small to be seen even under a microscope. The amount you could get on the point of a pin could kill an entire herd of hogs.

QUESTION: Can you tell when a hog has cholera?

ANSWER: That's one of the worst things about hog cholera—a number of other maladies may show symptoms like it. Usually the first symptoms of cholera include loss of appetite, fever, weakness and prostration. Pigs may start dying rapidly.

QUESTION: Can cholera be cured?

ANSWER: There is no cure. Prevention is the only answer. Hog cholera losses can be cut down to almost nothing by proper vaccination of pigs around weaning time.

QUESTION: Any special points to bear in mind about vaccination?

ANSWER: Yes. Only healthy pigs in good condition should be vaccinated. Otherwise, vaccination with serum and virus may cause bad reactions. A careful examination should always be made by the veterinarians to determine whether or not the pigs are in proper condition for vaccination. Another important point: The virus is dangerous and should be handled only by someone who knows how; and one who understands sterilization of equipment and other precautions.

MILK-FEED RATIO ON DOWNGRADE

The value of Virginia's milk, in relation to the amount of dairy feed it would buy, dropped in June; but is still better position than the average for the United States.

Ben F. Morgan, Jr., dairy marketing specialist at V. P. E., said Virginia dairymen could buy only 112 pounds of dairy feed with 100 pounds of milk in June, as compared to 117 pounds of feed in May. This was about 17 pounds below the average for June, and one pound below June a year ago.

However, the average United States dairyman could buy only 92 pounds of dairy feed with 100 pounds of milk.

Dairymen in South Atlantic states were in a more favorable position. They could buy 112 pounds of feed with 100 pounds of milk.

Morgan says dairymen can expect little relief in feed prices during the next year. The price support for the 1950 wheat crop in Virginia —$2.24 a bushel, 4c above last year—will have its effect. And other factors, such as an expected shorter crop and increased insect damage, will support higher feed costs.

Prices received for all Virginia milk in June averaged 20c per 100 pounds below May, but 20c per 100 pounds above June a year ago. Morgan explains that this year's higher average price is largely due to a 10c per 100 pounds higher manufactured milk price, and a larger percentage of Virginia's total production in the higher-priced fluid channels. Those two factors have raised the price for all milk even though the fluid milk price is down some from last year.

GAME COMMISSION TO HAVE EXHIBIT

The Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries is planning a 40-foot functional educational exhibit for display at the Atlantic Rural Exposition to be held in Richmond from September 28 through October 7, the Commission's Executive Director, I. T. Quinn, announced today.

With a constantly increasing pressure being placed on Virginia's wildlife resources, the exhibit is designed to bring the attention of the public to the need of conservation practices.

The exhibit will graphically portray the set up of the present commission and show how it is broken down into five divisions concerned with game, fish, finances, law enforcements, and education. Panels will describe the work of each separate division, maps and graphs will explain the more salient features of the Commission's long range wildlife restoration program, and the sportsman will be shown by means of diagrams explaining how his hunting and fishing dollar is spent, exactly how his money is holding the bulwark against misuse of our wildlife resources.

A rustic, out-of-doors effect is planned for the exhibit, with a long slab-built counter across the front holding material of interest to the sportsman. A pen of live quail is expected to add interest to the counter display.

APPLE MARKETING CLINICS SCHEDULED DURING AUGUST

Three apple marketing clinics, designed to further efficient selling of high quality Virginia fruit have been scheduled for August.

Fred Dreiling, tree fruits specialist at V. P. I., said the clinics will be held August 16 in Roanoke; August 17 in Waynesboro, and August 18 in Winchester.

Participating will be fruit growers, buyers and distributors of chain and independent stores, professional agricultural workers, and representatives of the Virginia Apple Commission.

Some of the topics slated for discussion are expected processors' needs for apples this year, various methods of packaging, methods of increasing sales of Virginia apples in southern states, and market outlook information.
